

Face-to-face counselling is one of the most effective modes of counselling because the therapist and client can see each other, read each other's body language and emotions, touch if need be. The change of scenery for the client away from their usual environment can in itself be therapeutic.

